PUBLICATIONS

Research Interests

Keith Moser is Professor of French and Francophone Studies at Mississippi State University and author of over 150 publications, including nine books. His research spans social-ecological justice, environmental ethics, postmodern French thought, and the ethics of emerging technologies.

In recent years, Moser has focused on artificial intelligence (AI), post-truth culture, and the crisis of simulation, exploring how AI and advanced technologies generate hyperreal environments that blur or erase reality. He investigates digital monstrosity, fake news, and conspiracy culture, emphasizing the ethical responsibilities of creators, platforms, and users.

His work extends to the medical humanities, including microbial ethics, and to the Blue Humanities, exploring human–ocean relationships. Moser also engages with degrowth studies and critiques of late-stage capitalism, examining the environmental, social, and ethical consequences of contemporary economic systems.

Across environmental and technological studies, Moser works interdisciplinarily—drawing on environmental philosophy, ecocriticism, ecolinguistics, biosemiotics, and Monster Studies—to explore how language, literature, and culture shape ethical understanding and responsibility toward both human and other-than-human communities.

Throughout his scholarship, Moser emphasizes the connection between theory and social impact, fostering dialogue across disciplines and encouraging reflection on ethical responsibility in an increasingly complex, technological, ecological, and socio-economic world.
